The biggest problem here is

Israel is found to have used the projectiles, developed for U.S. forces in Vietnam, which release hundreds of steel shards from each grenade-size weapon.

Press reports from Lebanon said that cluster bombs were dropped on the Palestinian refugee camp of Bourj Brajneh near Beirut and the Armenian hospital at Aazzouniye in the hills over the Bekaa Valley. According to Washington Post correspondent Jonathan C. Randal, who saw the anti-personnel bombs at the hospital last Sunday, no one was killed by them in the air attack there but three persons were severely injured when they picked up unexploded weapons.

About 22,000 cluster bomb projectiles were supplied by the Unit-ed States to Israel in the early 1970s, on condition that they be used only for "defensive purposes." Late in 1976, Israel reportedly promised the Ford administration that the bombs would only be used against military, fornified targets and only if Israel were attacked by more than one country.

After reports that eluster bombs were used by Israel against refugee camps, farms and villages in early 1978, in the previous large-scale in-vasion of Lebanna, Israeli authorities informed Washington that a mistake had been made in using the weapons and promised to impose tighter restrictions. The current Lebanese devastarinn was described on Thursday by Rep. Lee H. Hamilton, Democrat of Indiana and chairman of the House subcommittee, as a "car-

U.S.-Latin Relations May End Up Surviving Conflict in Falklands

MEXICO CITY - Despite Latin America's dismay at U.S. support for Britain in the Falklands conflict. Washington's relations with much of the continent may not have been permanently damaged by the crisis, according to diplomats, government officials and other experts in the region.

The sources said Argentina's surrender in the islands had dampened Latin America's emotional response to the conflict and had opened the way for gradual nor-malization of ties with Washing-

A senior official in Mexico said he thought the impact of the crisis on United States-Latin American relations bad been exaggerated. "Yes, they have been affected, but not in a very serious way," be said.
"In each country, it's the bilateral relationship with Washington that really counts.

Diplomats said that Latin America would continue to campaign strongly for negotiations under United Nations auspices that would lead to Argentine control over the Faiklands. They said no nation in the region would agree to participate in joint administration of the islands for fear of undermining Argentina's claim. The United States relations with Argentina, they went on, would remain badly scarred by the conflict, although much would depend on internal developments in Argentina and on Washington's ability to persuade London to adopt a conciliatory attitude about the Falklands.

But they argued that since most Latin governments gave more importance to their relations with Washington than those with Buenos Aires, the Falklands issue would soon fade as a major point of friction with the United States.

Despite the perception in some Washington circles that Latin America had lined up as a bloc with Argentina and against Britain and its ILS ally receives in Latin and its U.S. ally, reactions in Latin America were more varied and complex.

Because Argentines have never disguised their feeling of superiority over the rest of Latin America, often boasting of pure European stock, they have generally been disliked in the region. Many Latin officials, who in public expressed solidarity with Buenos Aires, privately boped to see Argentine arregance" deflated by a humiliating defeat in the Falklands.

Argentine diplomats lobbying for Latin American support in recent weeks admitted encountering resistance resulting from their traditional aloofness. "As you know," an Argentine official said "our prepotency hasn't exactly earned us the affection of Latin America.

Even in public there was less than unanimous support for Ar-gentina. Latin America was in fact little more than a quartet comprising Venezuela, Peru, Guatemala and Panama, And, in each case, special circumstances may have been as important as direct sympathy for Argentina: Venezuela claims twothirds of neighboring Guyana, Peru has a longstanding territorial dispute with Chile, Guatemala claims Belize as its own, and Panama remains sensitive to the U.S. presence in the former canal zone.

Only the leftist regimes in Cuba and Nicaragua, which strongly supported Argentina's rightist junta in the crisis, are boping that irreparable damage has been caused to U.S. relations with the region.

Biafran Leader Returns to Nigeria

LAGOS - Gen. Odumegwu Ojukwu, who led the secessionist side in the civil war in the late 1960s, returned to Nigeria on Friday where a crowd welcomed him after more than 12 years in exile in the Ivory Coast following his defeat.

More than 5,000 people, mostly from Gen. Ojukwa's Ibo tribe, came to welcome the man that most Ibos still regard as their leader. His arrival, after a pardon granted by President Shehn Shagari a month ago. was the final act of reconciliation after the civil war, in which at least 500,000 people died in an Too attempt at secession from federal Nigeria.

Thatcher, in Falklands Aftermath, Evokes a Revival of Nationalism

By R.W. Apple Jr.

New York Times Service LONDON - The British are a pragmatie people, and their postwar history has been a process of accommodation to the reality of reduced power and to the need of acting in concert with allies.

But now, in the aftermath of the triumph over Argentina, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher seems prepared to lead a nationalist revival. In the emphoria of victory, she has sounded increasingly like De Gaulle, increasingly determined to tell the world that Britain is quite able to work out its own solutions to its own problems.

Thus, in ber statement to the House of Commons Tuesday, Mrs. Thatcher emphasized several times the "will to succeed" that this country had shown in the Falklands. And she angrily told Mi-chael Foot, the opposition Labor Party leader, that British servicemen had not died in the islands so she could turn them over to a United Nations trusteeship, as be fall in Blackpool, former Prime Minister Edward Heath was booed when he ventured complimentary remarks about the European Monetary System, to which Britain does not belong.

Despite the support expressed by President Reagan for British war policy during his visit to London and despite the materiel sup-plied by the United States, he is seen by many people bere as a fumbling and inconsistent leader of the Western alliance.

Many Britons objected when they read that the president, in welcoming the end of hostilities, had referred only to a cease-fire and not to a surrender, adopting the words also used by Lt. Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri, the Argentine leader forced to resign after the defeat at Stanley. Gen. Galtieri was widely seen here as a coward incapable even of admitting that his country had been beaten.

On Tuesday night, Alan Clark, a prominent Tory Member of Parliament, was asked what would hapnen if the United States objected to Britain's plans for the Falkas the leader of what is known as the War Party, and his reply, while perhaps injudicious, accurately represented the feelings of the Conservative right wing, which is the prime minister's natural political and ideological home. "I'm not especially concerned what attitude the Americans take, he said. "They didn't retake the islands, and they won't run them."

There is little doubt that Britain has or can procure the means to defend the Falklands, as Mrs. Thatcher has promised to do. It will mean a bigger navy, which scens certain anyway, and perhaps slightly higher taxes. But holding the islands certainly is a far smaller challenge than retaking them and probably a smaller challenge than maintaining a semblance of order in Northern Ire-

But doing so will inevitably bring friction with Britain's allies, which may in turn reinforce the new nationalism afoot in the land. Zbigniew Brzezinski, national security adviser under President Carter, summed up Washington's attitude on British television the other night by remarking that the United States, preoccu-pied with the global struggle against Communism, had no real interest in sustaining British sovereignty in the Falklands into the indefinite future. Comparing the British position in the Falklands with that of the United States in the Panama Canal Zone, he argued that links with Argentina were inevitable and that the Falklanders would have to be made to understand that. After a settling-down period of some months, be said, Britain must come to see that "we live in an age of nation-states, an age when Eu-ropean colonialism has run its

Self-Government

Mrs. Thatcher apparently in-tends to try to defuse charges of colonialism by bringing the Falklands to some sort of self-govern-ing status within the Commonwealth. A first suggestion of the role of Rex Hunt, the colonial governor. Another is expected in a decision to give the Falklanders more voice in the administration of the islands.

But that will not be enough to end Argentine bostility; the only thing that will do that, it now appears, will be an agreement to ex-plore future relationships around the bargaining table.

For the moment, Mrs. Thatcher has ruled out talks of any kind. eventually relent, perhaps after the next general election in 1983 or 1984, if she is re-elected, as now seems likely. Jurisdiction on Water Given to States by U.S.

WASHINGTON - In a decision with sweeping implications for areas in the Western United States where water is scarce, the Justice Department has ruled that U.S. agencies cannot claim the right to unappropriated water on federal land without specific con-

Atturney General William

Challenge at the UN

The Soviet government "emphatically rejects." Andrei Groymko told the United Nations, "the absurd talk" about the use of chemical weapons — by Soviet clients in Laos and Cambodia and by Moscow itself in Afghanistan. President Reagan responded on Thursday, telling the same audience that the Soviet Union had broken its treaty word not to use chemical and biological weapons.

So who is telling the truth? The UN special session on disarmament can hardly dodge the question if it is at all serious about its high mission. Even if each superpower were not demanding that the conference validate its position on the chemical weapons issue. the conferees would have a deep interest in establishing their relative good faith. Mr. Gromyko uttered his denial, after all, in the context of proposing that yet another inter-national agreement banning chemical weap-ons be made. Surely the UN session will find it relevant to note how the Soviet governmenf has recently been treating its earlier international pledges on this very matter.

Mr. Reagan asserted that the United States has "conclusive evidence" of the use of chemical and toxin weapons by the Russians in Afghanistan and by the Vietnamese and Cambodian regimes in Laos and Cambodia. We presume the UN conferees will want to inspect the U.S. evidence. But, wisely, Mr. Reagan did not let it go at that. The Communist perpetrators of chemical warfare have so far denied UN investigators access to the regions. Mr. Reagan called on them to admit those UN experts so that they can "conduct an effective, independent investigation to verify cessation of these horrors."

It will be said by some in the great pipe organ on the East River that Mr. Reagan was simply making anti-Communist propaganda. Why deny it? He was making propaganda, the best kind and a necessary kind. What he said was true and deserved to be said precisely in that forum, vulnerable as it is, we fear, to windy one-sided expostulations. The UN disarmament conference badly needs to come to terms with a country, the Soviet Union, with the gall to demand a new ban on an odious form of warfare that it is practicing and covering up even as it speaks.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

Why Have a Steel War?

"This is especially welcome news," is how William DeLancy of Republic Steel described the Commerce Department decision to levy penalties on steel imported from nine countries. The deeply depressed American steel industry has indeed won a small battle in its war to protect its domestic market. But for the economy as a whole, the cost of victory will be high and the benefits modest. No legal or diplomatic maneuvering can solve the industry's fundamental problems: excess capacity and low productivity.

Imports last year accounted for about 20 percent of steel sales. Domestic companies insist that some of these imports were made possible only by foreign government subsidies. After a futile search for a different explanation, the Commerce Department has tentatively agreed. Some 3.9 million tons, it says, were unfairly dumped.

Importers of steel from seven European countries, plus Brazil and South Africa, must henceforth post bonds equal to the estimated subsidies. If the U.S. International Trade Commission eventually rules that the imports injured American producers, the honds will be forfeited.

Since few would risk large losses, the ruling is likely to stop imports from Britain, France and Italy, which are said to subsidize prices by at least 20 percent.

The initial effect may be a modest spurt in domestic sales. But medium-term consequences for the economy as a whole, and for Big Steel in particular, are hardly favorable. The European Economic Community plans to retaliate by restricting imports of American products. And the increase in market share gained by U.S. steel producers will almost certainly be lost as importers switch to unsubsidized but still cheaper steel from West Germany, Japan and South Korea.

Is the United States thus doomed to a trade war no one can win? Diplomats still hope for an agreement in which the Common Market limits exports and American steelmakers withdraw their complaints. That would save some grief, but it would only shift the focus of torment. U.S. mills are operating at only 43 percent of capacity. That will improve as the recession ends. But to profit substantially, U.S. steelmakers will still have to cut costs. Even under the most optimistic estimates, only about three-fourths of American capacity is modern enough to prosper in a competitive world market.

A leaner industry would not be a disaster. It would be more than adequate for national defense. U.S. consumers would benefit from the low prices hrought hy international competition. But shrinkage would ohviously disrupt the lives and livelihoods of thousands of steelworkers and their communities.

One approach would be to make a deal with organized labor. The government might offer unemployment benefits, relocation allowances and retraining incentives. In return, labor might accept lower pay and stop pressing Congress for import restrictions.

U.S. steelworkers are not ready for such a solution; they still hope for political and economic miracles. Nor is the administration prepared to bear any part of the financial burden of industrial reorganization. But in the end, something of this sort has to be tried. America cannot hold back great economic forces without risking its prosperity. Nor can it ignore the plight of those who lose from economic change.

A Journdiced Eye for Galtieri

It was Galtieri who set Argentina on its rash adventure. He presided over a regime that time and again refused to take advantage of diplomatic offers that would have enabled Argentina to cut her losses when it was clear that the adventure was not going to succeed. New Perspectives in Saudi Arabia

The new Saudi crown prince, Abdullah, has close contacts with Syria. This could affect the country's relations with Damascus and lead to internal dissension with the new king, who is regarded as pro-Western. King Fahd for his own part is suspicious of Syrian support for Khomeini's Iran, which in turn is thought likely to foment unrest among Saudi Shiites as a means of destabilizing the Sunnite ruling house in Riyadh. This new power constellation comes into being at a critical time for the Saudi state.

Remember the Lesson of Sweden

Those in Western Europe who seek unilateral nuclear disarmament and a more neutral stance in answer to the tensions of the nuclear balance of terror would do well to keep an eve on developments around Sweden.

It was on the Swedish coast that a Soviet submarine went aground last year, in an embarrassingly clumsy misapplication of Soviet military presence to a neutral country.

And even as anti-nuclear demonstrators were greeting President Reagan on his European tour, neutral Sweden was obliged to drop depth charges to chase an unidentified foreign submarine out of Sweden's waters.

What the people of Argentina need now is to wake up to reality. They have been fed phony dreams of glory; they were told they were winning when they were losing; they have been lied to by their leaders and their news media. Even now, the junta seeks to preserve unreality by pretending the surrender of all its forces was a minor setback in a grand campaign, and by darkly hinting that the United States was the villain.

The shame of Argentina is not in diplomatic miscalculation, nor in losing a military action. The dishonor lies in the way an intelligent and civilized populace permitted jingoism and false pride to blind it to reality.

These stark realities are not recounted by British commentators for fear of "rubbing it in," of being mean-spirited to the losers, or even of encouraging them to insist on ven-geance and continued war. At the moment, the reality seems too painful or too dangerous for anyone in Argentina to face. But only hy stressing these facts - by waking Argentines to the truth of their terrible misleader-

If we are to treat Argentines as adults and equals, we should urge them to throw out the rest of their beribboned and braided doormen and to examine the real causes of the collapse of their national standing.

The way for Argentina to stand tall among nations is not to build an army and buy arms with which to threaten its neighbors and subjugate its own people. The way is to reorganize its economy and polity to take advantage of its great human and natural resources. The object of U.S. policy at this moment should be to help the Argenines face the conse-quences of their self-delusion.

One day the new desaparecidos will come home—the soldiers who were made to suffer in captivity by a paralyzed junta afraid of the impact of their return. Then there may be an accounting. In the meantime, Argentina's friends should do nothing to save the face of any regime that avoids deserved disgrace by claiming to have been stabbed in the back.

The invasion is the collision of two different views of reality: on one hand. Israel's severe and terri- has it that at some suitably distant date, the Palestinians in the occupied territories may have autonomy without land on exclusively Israeli terms; the other, exiled Palestinians are to be exterminated. If extermination of the "terrorists" also includes the killing of Leha-nese civilians — their deaths now run into the thousands — then so much the worse for them. Thus in Lebanon, the West Bank and Gaza, fsrael has played its last card, after which talk of po-litical settlement — either in Leba-non or on the West Bank — is only the imposition of unadorned force. Sbould the Palestinians not acquiesce in their own subjugation or extermination — fates they will obviously resist at all costs the cause they represent is only temporarily buried.

That much is sure. As to how many countries need to be destroyed, how many lives lost, how many weapons acquired and used, how many more Arab territories occupied and ruled, how many more peoples dispossessed and dispersed — these are figures shrugged away as incidental deserved retribution for Arab in-

The idea that Lebanon can be reconstituted or "restored" - a word used by both Secretary of State Haig and the Israelis - ig-nores the Lebanese people and

The common charge is that Arabs will not accept Israel, yet here is Israel not accept Israel, yet here is Israel not only violently remaking Lebanon hut also remaking the past.

Moreover, the other Arab re-

Promises To Make Not Keep

By Tom Wicker

NEW YORK — President Leonid Brezhnev's pledge that the Soviet Union would not be the first to use nuclear weapons, says the U.S. State Department, is "unverifiable and uneuforceable" and "gives no assurance that an aggressor would not in fact resort to the first use of nuclear weapons during a conflict."

But what if the United States were to make a no-first-use pledge? Echoing a statement made earlier by Secretary Haig, the same State Department spokesman, Dean Fischer, said that "would be tanta-mount to making Europe safe for conventional aggression.

In other words, the Russians cannot be trusted to keep their pledge, so it "gives no assurance"; but the United States would, of course, keeps its no-first-use promise, which would therefore leave Europe defenseless against supposedly overwhelming Soviet conventional forces.

Baloney. Aside from the debat-able question whether the Warsaw Pact's nonnuclear power in Europe is all that formidable, the fact is that neither superpower would accept at face value the other's mere pledge not to use nuclear weapons first. As long as each side has the capacity to use such weapons, the other will have to take into account the possibility that its adversary might do so, pledge or no pledge — particularly if it were losing a conventional war.

That is why no essential element of deterrence against conventional attack would be lost if the United States were to pledge no first use of nuclear weapons. That is why the Soviet Union was able to make such a pledge, secure in the knowl-edge that it gave up no real mil-tary advantage. And that is why Reagan would do better to make the same pledge than to let people like Gen. Bernard Rogers, the NATO commander, go around saying — as he did on the day of the Soviet pledge — that he would recommend first use of nuclear weapons if the alliance faced do feat in a conventional war.

No-first-use is a political statement; and time is likely to show that the Soviet Union gained comsiderable political advantage by declaring it will not use nuclear weapons first, while the United States continues to say it will. And to the degree that both sides might eventually be pressured or per-suaded actually to pull back or dis-mantle nuclear weapons in Europe — giving some teeth to a no-first-use policy — the Brezhnev declara-tion might be more significant than the State Department allows.

The United States, moreover, is not all that much more selfiess than the Soviet Union in its government's perceptions of national security, or in its professions on arms control. President Reagan did not mention in his United Na-States that refused to ratify SALT II, and that he had campaigned hard against it.

He did not mention that Washington, not Moscow, insisted on leaving multiple independently tar-geted warheads uncovered by SALT I, since the United States was then ahead in that field possibly the single most wrong-headed decision hy either power in strategic arms control history.

In his recital of that history. Reagan did not even mention the Soviet-American treaty banning anti-ballistic missile systems possibly because his secretary of defense and other military planners are saying openly that an ABM defense might have to be built to protect the vulnerable MX missile. That would almost surely abrogate the treaty.

And the so-called "Densepack" basing scheme for the MX that the president himself favors apparent would constitute a violation of his own pledge to observe the terms of SALT II as long as Moscow does.

The United States — under any administration - acts on arms control in its perceived self-interest; so does the Soviet Union, as, for example, when it rejected Reagan's Eureka College propos-als for deep cuts in the land-based missiles that make up most of Moscow's strategic force. That besic fact of arms control negotia-tions is well understood by both sides' professionals. It might strengthen their hands greatly if leaders on both sides would begin educating the world's peoples on this essential point, rather than merely professing the virtues of their own self-serving positions.

Thus Reagan was right, in his UN speech, to call Brezhneva hand on the Soviet leader's pious plea for "the elimination of chemical weapons from the face of the earth." From the propagators of "yellow rain," that deserved nothing but the scorn the president showed for it.

And the more he can avoid the same sort of transparent distortions in his own pronouncements, the more credible the world will find Reagan himself.

Montparnasse Memories: Gertrude Stein

by Waverley Root

ARIS — I was still in my haze on first being in Paris when a young man who was working as a proofreader on the Paris Tribune took me to a cocktail party. If he told me who was giving it, the information did not register.

Caught in the usual dense, slowly milling crowd with a glass in my hand, I noticed vaguely a solidly built woman sitting in a large armchair as if it were a throne, who might very well have been the hostess, but addressed in the didn't register.

as it is material and the state of the source of the state of the stat

I was too much enthralled by the paintings on the walls to notice I was too much enthralled by the paintings on the walls to notice anything else; they surpassed everything of their period which I had yet seen, except for the recently discovered collection of Impressionists in the Luxembourg Museum. I spent the rest of my time wondering at them, and have oo recollection of leaving; I must have slipped away impolitely without saying goodbye to anyhody.

It was two or three months later that I realized for the first time that I had been the guest of Gertrude Stein at 27, rue de Fleurus.

The inspection of her pictures was the only personal contact, if it can be called that, which I ever had with Germude Stein, but I was of course constantly aware of her existence as a large huminary located in the same galaxy which I was using; and insignificant as I was, I have reason to believe that she was aware of mine, if only as a public outsance. This was believe that she was aware of mine, if only as a public outsance. This was because for five years I wrote most of the book page of the Paris Tri-bane, where it seems, I learn from Hugh Ford's book "Published in Paris," I once remarked that she had ceased to amuse even the "ephemerally clever persons who at first liked to talk about her because her particular brand of consense was at least a change from the sort of nonsense to which they had previously listened."

I do not suppose that this pleased her, and some of my subsequent criticisms may have pleased her even less, but as I reread them now, shoot half a century later, I do not think I was particularly unfair to

I would not maintain today that "nonsense" is a complete summing up of the work of Gertrude Stein, oor was that my attitude either in the up of the work of Gertrude Stein, oor was that my attitude either in the 1930s. I certainly did not approach it with any preconceived attitude of hostility. I had read both "Three Lives" and "The Making of Americans" (the latter all the way through, a task which Edmund Wilson, who did not manage it, thought might be impossible) before I came to Paris, so I must have gotten hold of the second almost from the time of its publication; it came out in 1925 and I reached Paris in the spring of 1927. I find by digging into my files that I wrote, when "The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas" was published: "It appears to me that after Three Lives' and The Making of Americans' Gertrude Stein dived into a tunnel, emerging briefly with 'Composition as Explanation,' and then disappearing again until she popped out with the present book."

I remarked also that "Miss Stein has all but eliminated punctuation, but her sentences are so perfectly phrased that no punctuation is necessary. They can only be read one way." This does not sound particularly alevolent to me, though I am perhaps a prejudiced observer.

Gertrude Stein did indeed have a gift for putting together sentences so concise and so spare that they fall from the page with the thump of the inevitable. She possessed a recognizably true style, by which I mean one which is distinguished out merely by a pattern of writing, which is ornament; but by a pattern of thinking, which is structure. You feel the same beat in the universally accessible "Autobiography" as in her less-intelligi-ble pieces, in which I fear it serves no good purpose.

It was another writer who picked up this tool and used it most effectively — Ernest Hemingway. His style improved when it developed to a point where it owed less to Gertrude Stein; but it was then so close to hers that she was virtually praising herself when she sent an unsolicited review of "Three Stories and Ten Poems" (vintage 1923) to the Paris Tribane, which printed it but did not deem it necessary, under the circlimstances, to pay for it.

Three Stories and Ten Poems is very pleasantly said [Miss Stein opined]. So far so good, further than that, and as far as that, I may say of Jacques Lipchitz' "Portrait of Gertrude Stein" (1920).

Ernest Hemingway that as he sticks to poetry and intelligence it is both poetry and intelligence. Roosevelt is genuinely felt as young as Hemingway and as old as Roosevelt. I should say that Hemingway should stick to poetry and intelligence and eschew the hotter emotions and the more turgid vision. Intelligence and a great deal of it is a good thing to use when you have it, it's all for the best."

Gertrude Stein not only gave advice about writing to Hemingway in public, she also did it in private, and he profited by it. In addition, he picked up echoes of her style by induction, when he belped type the manuscript of "The Making of Americans" and read proof oo it. Eventually he outgrew her, and her greatest contribution to his future work may have been models she provided for him of the well-turned sentence. I admire perfect sentences myself, but they are necessarily achievements on the small scale. That Gertrude Stein had the force to create on the large scale may be doubted: "The Making of Americans" is long, but length and breadth are different dimensions. Some analyzers regard with admiration her employment of what she called "the coolinuous present." Perhaps this is only another way of saying that development through time was out of her reach. Her music was unmodulated, played from beginning to end in the same key.

The review of mine which was the most likely to have caught the attention of Gertrude Stein was of her "Lucy Church Amiahly"; one might dare deduce that she noticed it from the fact that she never sent me a book to review again. It took the form of a parody of her own style. a device employed by others, including Hemingway, even before he hroke with her. I fear it is far from being a masterpiece of the genre, but I reprint it here in case it may still possess some slight documentary

A REVIEW AND WHICH SMELLS LIKE A NOVEL Lucy Church Amiably: a Novel of Romantic beauty and nature and which Looks like an Engraving, by Gertrude Stein, published by "the plain Edition an Edition of first Editions of all the work not yet Printed of Gertrude Stein," Paris.

You can read sometimes Three Lives. Sometimes you can you can read sometimes Conversation as Explanation. You can read even you can read sometimes you can read if you have time sometimes you can read The Making of Americans.

You cannot read Lucy Church Amiahly. Not even sometimes. As an authoress writes a book a punk story. Can you read much of this. She said can you read much of this. Can you read much. Of this on page nineteen. Nineteen and two is twenty-

one. Twentyone twentytwo twentythree. Read much:

"To leave on the thirtieth and to arrive on the second and to be on the way on the fourth and to be settled by the fourtenth and to be having word of their decision on the sixteenth and to be forgiven on the seventeenth not twice but ooce. This makes it as noiseless as ever." But oot noiseless enough.

We can continue. We can continue as if we liked it. We can continue as if as if we continued. We continue:

"She said. It is a great pleasure to put it there. She said it is a great pleasure when it is there. She said. It is oot only necessary but needful and for many reasons and because of oot having any present plan. She said that it was oot very well said."

She said it herself. She oot only said it she said it. It was not very well said. She said it, I said it, we all said it. It was not very well said.

Lamartine was not a queen. William James did not know dames.

Some parts of Lucy Church Amiably are more difficult than others.

Some parts of Lucy Church Amiably are less difficult than others. Some parts of Lucy Church Amiably are more simple than others. "She said. And with a nod she turned her head toward the falling water. Amiably."

This is less difficult than than than. Others. And with a nod she turned her head toward the falling water. Poulaphouca.

There is an explanation. When a wife has a cow a love story there should be an explanation. With Lucy Church Amiably there is an explanation explanation is is called Advertisement. It is less difficult than the other other parts of Lucy Church Amiably:

"ADVERTISEMENT

"Lucy Church Amiably. There is a church and it is in Lucey and it has a steeple and the steeple is a pagoda and there is no reason for it and it looks like something else. Beside this there is amiably and this comes from the paragraph. "Select your song she said and it was done and then she said and it was with a nod and then she bent her head in the direction of the falling water. Ambiably. This altogether makes a return to romantic nature that is it makes a landscape look like an engraving in which there are some people, after all if they are to be seen there they feel as pretty as they look and this makes it have a river a gorge an inundation and a remarkable meadowed mass which is whatever they use not to feed but to bed cows. Lucy Church Amiably is a novel of romantic beauty and cature and of Lucy Church and John Mary and Simon Therese."

This is less difficult than other parts. This is more simple. But then it is

She said by repeating you can change the meaning you can actually Repeat

Stein in the Luxembourg Gardens. Paris (about 1904).

But then it is it is all simple. It is all simple. It is all simple. It is all.

Rereading this review today and some others which I wrote in the early 1930s, it does not seem to me that I would today revise to any great extent the opinions I expressed about her prose then,

I did not side with those who, irritated by a sort of writing too foreign from the familiar norms to which they were accustomed, dismissed it automatically and arhitrarily as valueless. I would out have said that she contributed nothing to the development of modern literature, but I did oot see her contribution as a major one, certainly not comparable with that of James Joyce — though at that time these two names were often coupled, as if they were of equal value, and even as if they were headed in the same direction, though it seemed evident to me that they constitut-

I would certainly not have subscribed to the opinion expressed in 1932 hy an anonymous writer: "It is an undisputed fact that the influence of Gertrude Stein upon the generation of young writers of today has been the most vital force in American letters," even before I learned that the unnamed authority who had produced this estimate was Miss Stein hereals.

It would have been my opinion that if Gertrude Stein was leading young writers anywhere, it was up a blind alley. What leadership she provided for young writers (and she did provide some — Hemingway acknowledged his debt to her before they fell out) was given to very young authors. As soon as they matured, they followed Hemingway's example and cast off the apron strings. Possibly she was a better teacher than a doer, a phenomenon not infrequent in a number of domains. Hemingway, who learned much both from Ezra Pound and from Gertrude Stein, said once, "Ezra was right half the time, and when he was wrong, he was so wrong you were never in doubt about it. Gertrude was always right."

It Goes Under the Rug in Switzerland

by Mavis Guinard

AUSANNE Switzerland - Besides chocolates and cuckoo clocks, Switzerland is famous for cleanliness. Tourists rave as much about its snowy sheets as its snowy glaciers. Spring-cleaning lasts the year round, and on any sunny day, bousewives festoon their windows with pillows and quilts. Sunday clothes and the citizen-soldier's uniform air on every balcony. In Geneva, orange-clad streetcleaners are out there scrubbing the sidewalks at 4 a.m. before the first Swiss banker is awake. On May Day, after the red banners and the fist-clenching march-ers, lunge sweeping machines close the parade, scooping up any leftover tract. It was not always so.

Halfway into the 19th century, Switzerland was about as dirty as the average European country, which was pretty dirty. Early Chris-tian morality, then barbarian invasions had wiped out Roman bath babits. In the Middle Ages, public bathhouses, Turkish baths brought back from the Crusades and strict monastic rule set new standards. But this undue concern for the body was denounced by the religious reformer and counter-reformer

Fear of syphilis dealt the last hlow to the coxily permissive bathhouses. Out with pro-miscuity went the bathwater. Louis XIV was noted for using lots of water on the fountains of Versailles, little on himself. Most of Europe lived secure in the virtue of an étui de crasse—

a protective sheath of dirt. To make Switzerland clean took the combined pressure of tourism and the fear of epidemics. And then the pursuit of cleanliness found such a favorable terrain here, according to the Swiss sociologist Genevieve Heller, that it became compulsive.

First came the tourists. They found ancient mas in the Swiss-German cantons or along well-traveled roads usually clean. But as the first Alpine climbers ventured off the beaten track, things were different. Murray's 1838 "Handbook for Travelers in Switzerland" commented favorably on the way farmers kept their milk pails shiny but warned that any mountain chalet in which a traveler might want to stay would probably be filthy.

Yet, some of these well-situated chalets would become the luxurious hotels of the second half of the 19th century. Swiss innkeepers labored to meet the wishes of the English visitors who thought nothing of loading a metal tuh on a mule and demanding hot water at the end of the trail. Although the English were less exacting than the French about the food, they did insist on spotless napery. Four years after

Edison invented the light bulh in the 1870s, most of the hotels around Vevey and Montreux could provide their guests with electricity, elevators and imported bathrooms. In remote areas, maids higged hot water up to the

By the end of the century, Switzerland had established its hygienic, Alpine-pure image — prodded by the fear of epidemics. Ever since the discoveries of Pasteur, contamination had become a major worry of the well-to-do. Lethal epidemics of cholera and typhoid, brought from the colonies, had swept through Europe. For the health of the whole community, doctors campaigned for slum clearance and sewers. Sanitary housing regulations were slowly passed.

Philanthropists set out to clean the people. William Haldimand, born in London and a close friend of Charles Dickens, donated the first public baths and washhouses to the city of Lausanne. They were copied in other Swiss cities, although people still believed in that protective coat of dirt and thought that washing their feet weakened their eyes. The 10 haths provided for the entire population of Lansange were hardly enough, but this was quite normal - Oscar Lassar, the German who invented showers, once figured that Germans could have a bath only once every 30 years: there were 1,082 public baths for 32 million

Clearly, if the world was to be made safe, the lower classes had to be taught to bathe. In Switzerland, every schoolchild and military recruit got the lesson. From 1890 to World War I, every new school was equipped with showers. Once a week, the entire class was marched in and drilled to wash. The teacher turned on the single faucet. For the sake of discipline, the last rinse was cold.

Cold water became a bygienic mania. Starting in Silesia, cold baths, cold milk and hlack bread worked miracles on convinced patients. Two similar institutes were opened in German Switzerland Thermal spas once known to the Romans or in the Middle Ages, like Baden, Loèche and St. Moritz, attracted visitors for cure and pleasure. Doctors discovered that pure, high-altitude air cured tuberculosis. The Magic Mountain came into its own. The fear of contamination from invalids, linen and scrupulous cleaning of the rooms. From a rich man's privilege, cleanliness had become a tourist's right.

Just as sewers had obsessed the doctors, germs in dirt and dust obsessed both the hotelkeeper and the housewife. Cleanliness became a virtue and women were held responsible.

Cleaning was to rid society of all evil. To keep

who lived in regular hotels before sanatoriums

were opened, increased the concern for clean

her husband out of the bistrot and her daughter off the streets, woman's role was to keep the home clean and inviting. The Swiss are born teachers: Domestie science flourished in countless manuals and finally entered the classroom. Practical courses furnished a yearly contingeot of fresh domestic help for housewives "to train."

In many cantons today the girls find domestic science required before the end of secondary school. In the booklet used by Valaisan schools, on page 16, they learn the fine care of a broom: "Remove the dust and imbedded threads, wash the hrush and handle in a solution of ammonia, comb the fibers out of doors, but in the shade. Then wax the handle."

The pursuit of cleanliness solved 19th-century problems of dirt and disease and became a touristic delight. Now it is running into modern problems; some feel the ingrained habit have gone too far. Some, like the sociologist Heller, who wrote a well-documented, 230page thesis on the development of cleanliness in the canton of Vaud, wonder if the collective cleanliness does oot have its Freudian aspects. What lies under the immaculate surface?

The newspaper headlines document some particular modern problems. Swiss women - who obtained voting rights

10 years ago and equal rights last year - have denounced the systematic encouragement to keep them at home, shining it into "a museum of domestic stupidity." Girls resent being forced to take domestic science while the boys study science and math. In the new canton of the French Jura, the girls are boycotting the courses. One has gone to jail for it. By deliberately refusing to pay the alternative fine for non-attendance, she got herself locked up.

Spotless hotels, trains and streets depend on foreign help for the dirty work. But since the Swiss have tight quotas on foreigners, some of the workers are here illegally, living in vile conditions. Speculators invoke sanitary regulations to knock down low-rent older buildings to make way for profitable high rises. Squatters have moved in to try to stop the demolition. Youth exasperated by signs of atfluent municipal spending, has disrupted or-derly cities. After the Zurich riots of 1981, dilapidated tenements were handed over to them to use as autonomous centers. They became filthy crash-pads, a refuge for problem children and drug pushers. Lausanne authorities felt their center had to be closed. So did authorities in Zurich, who went a step further by leveling their center with bulldozers overnight. A swift, neat and clean operation.

Like many a compulsive housewife, Switzerland may have to realize that too much attention to the appearance of a place distracts from the needs of those living there.

Lady Astor's Latest Flap

by Deirdre Carmody

EW YORK - "If you were my busband, "Nancy Viscountess Astor once told Winston Churchill, "Pd poison your coffee." "If you were my wife," replied Churchill,

The drawing rooms of London buzzed gleefully with reports of that exchange, as they did time and time again with stories of Lady Astor's bons mots, outrageous deeds, controversial politics, dubious manners (she once spat at a columnist in one of the halls of the House of Commons), unceasing generosity, lavish entertaining at Cliveden, one of the great country houses in England, and untiring labor for ber working-class constituency in Plymouth.

She created a considerable national commo tion when she became the first woman to sit as a Member of the House of Commons, She then went on to be reelected six times and served in Parliament 25 years. (One Member of Parliament told her years later: "When you first took your seat. I endured the same kind of embarrassment as I would if a lady invaded my bathroom." "If I were as ugly as you." replied Lady Astor, "I should have no fear of any lady invading my bathroom.")

The life of the feisty, Virginia-born beauty who married Waldorf Astor, heir to a vast for tune, is obviously the stuff that legends and television dramas are made of. Indeed, a ninepart BBC/Time-Life mini-series, titled "Nancy Astor" and shown in England last winter, is oow under consideratioo hy public television in the United States.

And once again, Lady Astor is at the center of a controversy. It is really part of a larger question that is being asked increasingly these days as to just what liberties a dramatized biography should be permitted in portraying and interpretation the life of a historical flows. interpreting the life of a historical figure. In this instance, the two surviving sons of Lady Astor, distressed at the television portrayal of their mother, which received mixed reviews from critics in Britain, have asked an American relative what might be done to discourage the broadcasting of the mini-series in the Unit-

"She is made to appear not only as a sort of go-getter, but also a very superficial person who becomes egotistical, tyrannical and alto-gether objectionable." David Astor wrote to Brooke Astor, a second cousin by marriage to Lady Astor and a prominent member of New York society. "The explanation for the BBC team treating her in this way seems to be that they were trying to make it a dramatic human story and have therefore caricatured the latter part of her life." Astor wrote. "We feel that we ought to be doing something to try to defend her reputation against this mishandling."

Lady Astor's other surviving son, Sir John Jacoh Astor, wrote in a similar letter to Brooke Astor that the mini-series "has proved to be very bad indeed, and unfair about Mama."

There is little that Brooke Astor or any of the other Astors can do in way of legal action to stop the televising of the series in the United States. Nor could they have prevented the televising of it in England. Lady Astor died in 1964, a few weeks short of her 85th birthday, and under both British and American law, the dead cannot be libeled. In addition, any attempt at prior restraint in the United States is traditionally viewed as unconstitutional because it violates the First Amendment, which guarantees freedom of speech and of the press. In telephone interviews from London, Lady Astor's two sons and a niece criticized the mini-series for what they said were its inaccuracies and a distorted portrait of their relative. David Astor said that he had been consulted by the BBC and shown the original scripts. He said that the BBC made several changes in accordance with his suggestions, but that "when I saw it on television, I got the shock of my

"The people making the film came to see me at the start and made it plain that they had to make it into a good story that would work as a film," Astor said. "They were not interested in polines and her public life. They didn't know what to do with her career. They were out of their depth and they turned her into somebody who is unrecognizable. They presented someone who could never win a general election, let alone win seven. "Show biz at its worst," said Sir John. "They underplayed the serious part of my mother. She was taken very seriously by the women social workers at the time. She did a lot for nursery schools. She was friendly with a lot of serious people, and if she had been just a cantankerous flibbertigihbet, she wouldn't have had those friends. They passed over her visit to Russia with Bernard Shaw in a few seconds while spending a lot of time on scenes of my step-brother getting drunk in the mess."

Philip Hincheliffe, producer of the mini-series, and Derek Marlowe, who wrote the scripts, greet these objections with skepticism. "I slightly take exception to the family trying to manipulate the program," said Hincheliffe in a telephone interview. "My God, we fell over hackwards to be fair. David read the scripts. He was very excited about them and flattering about them. He thought that Derek really had got Nancy Astor 75 percent or 80 percent correct.

"What we are dealing with here is a discrepancy between the reading of the script and the final portrayal of the agiog process," Hinchcliffe continued. "I think we're talking about the negative side of her character when she got old, which, in fact, everybody testified to. I think we're getting the family saying they doo't like the unpleasant part of her character being played up."

Marlowe, the writer, said that a number of changes had been made on David Astor's suggestions about Lady Astor's attitude toward the Germans just before World War II. Lady Astor and her hushand believed in a policy of appeasement, Marlowe said, but were not pro-Nazi.

"We cut certain things after David saw the scripts for purely technical reasons -- because of money and to keep episodes down to their required length," Marlowe said. "Nothing was actually changed. But seeing actors and ac-tresses, seeing the landscape, is different from reading the script, and sometimes the whole thing comes to life in a different way than one

"I think he feels that she comes across unsympathetic to her audience and that, to the best of my ability, is true. She was incapable of giving love. It was one of her most destructive characteristics that she couldo't give love to the people closest to her. She was cold and probably vicious if she didn't get her way." It is precisely this view of Lady Astor that the Astor family is objecting to.

"She was a very warm woman." Sir John said. "A lot of people came to her when they were in trouble. She had a hell of a relation-ship with her ehildren. When you were sick as a child, she was very good at making you well. She was very good at massage."

There are a number of specific events that various members of the family say did not happen the way they are depicted in the television dramatization.

"It's like a very cheap imaginary 'Gone With The Wind' made in Dallas," said Nancy Lancaster, Lady Astor's niece and fellow Virginian, who is particularly enraged by the depiction of life at Mirador, the ancestral home in Virginia. "There's one scene where Lord Astor is making his own bed. Lord Astor making his own bed! In another place, they have a dinner party, supposedly at Mirador, where everyone is in tails and white tie. Well, you never sat down to dinner in white tie in the country.
"Everyone who knew her was perfectly horrified by the film," she concluded.

Lady Alexandra Metcalfe, a longtime friend of the Astor family, in a letter published in The Times of London, took exception to a scene in which Lady Astor in full evening regalia goes to meet Bobbie Shaw, her son from a previous marriage, the morning he was re-leased from prison after serving time on a conviction of homosexuality.

On his release she did not go to the prison gates dressed in a diamond tiara and ermine." Lady Alexandra wrote. "I met him and we had breakfast together before be went to the Astor house at Sandwich, where he remained for Mariowe acknowledges that no such scene took place. He says he portrayed Lady Astor coming directly from a ball at Blenheim in the Astor Rolls-Royce early in the morning to wait at the prison gates for her son's release because ARIS - A new French cuisine has arrived and, by any standards, it is undeniably celestial. It is scheduled to be launched Thursday with a Soviet Salyut spacecraft that will carry a French astronaut, the first West European to travel into space, accompanying two Russians to a rendezvous with two other Russians already in orbit.

Tucked away among the 400 kilos of scientific material that the French have provided for their share of the experiments during the eightday trip will be 4 kilos of food. As a small part of their contribution to the joint mission, the French are catering a single "purely French" meal for the five cosmonants. If all goes as planned, near the beginning of the voyage, as the Salyut-7 spacecraft passes over France, the four Soviet auts will become the dinner guests of their French companion.

Paul Bechereau, the food project manager at the French national space study center, the Centre National d'Etudes Spatiales in Toulouse, discussed the meal in a telephone interview. He sees it as an opportunity to offer both some "psychological comfort" to the French astronaut and "pride and pleasure to the [French] man in the street" to learn that, for the first time, men in space will be eating in la Française. In addition, Bechereau says, the project will provide French scientists (and chefs) with a glimpse of the problems involved in the preparation of a truly space-age cuisine.

The menu will include two pates and a creamy crab soup as hors d'ocuvres and a choice of rabbit stew à l'Alsacienne or crayfish with a sauce à l'Amoricaine for the main dish. A mild Cantal cheese will follow and finally a dessert of either pate de fruits - a kind of sugar-coated fruit jetty — and crème au chocolat — chocolate pudding. White hread — not the crusty French type — and rye bread will accompany the meal.

Army. The space center and the French Army have been responsible for most of the testing, with the Russians retaining the final decision.

Like any good chef protecting his recipes, the food companies are secretive regarding measures used to overcome the problems inherent in space travel. They are less reticent to discuss some of the problems they encountered. The most basic were technical: The food and its packaging will have to withstand the vibrations and increased force created by acceleration at takeoff as well as the effects of weightlessness in space. The chocolate pudding posed special problems during tests to simulate takeoff (it became a bit runny) and the sugar-coating on the fruit jelly created difficulties during tests for weightlessness (a bit messy).

Also, according to Daniel Grebot, a researcher at the Morey food company and a member of the scientific commission that traveled twice to Moscow to prepare the project, the Russians imposed "draconian demands" regarding bacteriological requirements. Grebot says one of the project's tenser moments came when the Russians hesitated for 48 hours regarding the acceptability of wild rabbit in the stew instead of the hygienically safer, but also less tasty, domestically raised rabbit. On France's urging, Moscow finally accepted wild rabbit.

Gastronomic criteria were equally harsh as the companies tried "to rival the best of French haute cuisine," according to officials. The dishes were presented, in a "pre-selection" phase, to the astronauts and then to a special French-Soviet commission for the final taste test.

In addition to technical and gastronomic demands, the Russians added some ideological requests. They asked, for example, that the food be country-style — thus the selection of proletarian pate de campagne and pate de poirre vert, rather than foie gras. The Kremlin also proposed the preparation of a French-Soviet meal as a symbol of East-West detente, but the French insisted that the meal be 100 percent French.

Still, as Bechereau admits, the meal will be less than typical of the

by Patricia Wells

OKYO - At 72, the lean and vigorous Kinjiro Omae is a walking advertisement for sushi. The second-generation master sushi chef has feasted on various combinations of raw fish and shellfish every day of his adult life, and when one looks at him it's easy to be convinced of the bealthful properties of raw fish with astringent touches of ginger, soy sauce and flery green horseradish.

Omae never tires of sushi (fish, shellfish or vegetables with vinegared rice) and sashimi (sliced raw fish) but his passion for one fish over another changes from year to year, decade to decade. Today, like many sushi connoisseurs, he favors, above all, the prized fatty tuna known as otoro.

This wasn't always the fashion. During the 18th century, the Japanese preferred the salmon-pink, delicate makajiki, or swordfish. To-day, it's less in demand, and the sushi palate now craves the fat red tuna that comes from the lower belly of the giant fish. According to Omae, whose father opened his first sushi shop in Tokyo in 1908, fatty tuna came into fashion only after World War ff. when the Japanese developed an appetite for richer, red meat.

With the proliferation of sushi shops all over the world, today one hears of sushi with avocado, sushi with marinated beef, sushi with crabmeat and even tomatoes. But at Ozushi, Omae's small and unassuming shop in Tokyo. you won't find anything but traditional, cor-rect, delicate and refined sushi. Omae, who has written a book about sushi, who regularly judges sushi competitions and travels around the world promoting a love of sushi, also still finds time to run the little shop his family has managed for the last 65 years.

Here, a carefully trained staff of half a dozen sushi chefs turns out intricate servings of raw and marinated fish, shellfish and vegetables in a shop that is decorated and organized in the classical Tokyo style. As tradition prescribes, the long and narrow sushi counter is made of elegant, and practical, white cypress. There is little other adornment, save for the bright blue and white curtain, or noren, that welcomes you inside, and the thick, custommade tea cups, or vunonu, given away to favored diners and friends at the end of the

The sushi chefs, who train for two to five years before taking their place behind the counter, are properly attired in white kimonos and hats. They follow almost monastic regulations: Except to greet customers and deal with orders, no one speaks as he makes sushi, so full concentration can be given to creation and preparation. No ooe wears even a wrist watch, respecting the tradition of simplicity and puri-

Unlike many sushi shops in Tokyo, which buy commercially prepared groku, the smooth and golden omelets. Ozushi prepares us own, fresh every day. Here, the top-quality black seaweed, nori, is stored in little tin boxes, to retain crispness and is removed, sheet by sheet, just seconds before the little rolls of nori-sushi will be filled with rice and pickled turnip, tuna or fermented soybeans. And while other shops are willing to serve the fiery green horseradish, or wasubi, from a tube or even make it from a processed powder, here it is grated fresh with each serving. The large knob of fresh wasabi is ceremonially prepared on a beautiful and wellworn old copper grater. Each morning, one of Omae's young chefs treks off to the Tsukiji fish market to bargain for the fatty tuna, the clams and sea bream, mantis shrimp and abalone that will be part of their daily offerings.

Although no one on the staff speaks English, diners can get by here quite well with a little gastronomic sign language. Perhaps the easiest method for those who don't speak Japanese is to ask a Japanese-speaking friend or the hotel receptionist to call and ask the chefs to prepare a sashimi and sushi assortment for you. It won't be a set platter as one finds in many shops, but rather a variety of perhaps six or seven orders — there are usually two servings to an order - of what was best in the market that day. Set aside a good hour or more so you can linger over each mound of fatty tuna or each portion of fresh and soothing, chilled white turnip sprouts, and also have time to observe as the chefs defuly slice, chop. cut and mold the various preparations.

At a recent meal, we began with delicate swordfish, buttery smooth and slightly salty, served with a fine grating of wasabi, a little mound of grated white turnip and purple, organic seaweed, an added touch of fantasy as well as elegance.

Next came a mixed platter of sashimi delica-cies — ark shell and abalone, octopus and mantis shrimp, red clams and horse clams — which offered a remarkable variety of colors, textures, aromas and shapes. The dish resembled a fresh forest, decorated with a careful arrangement of rosy pink pickled ginger and pungent, peppery greens, for clearing the pal-ate between portions.

The abalooc, called awabi, was firm, white and silky, and is served here only in top season, from April thorugh June. Before World War II and improved methods of fishing and transportation, abalone was always steamed in salt water before serving, to kill any possible parasites. Today, the Japanese feast on it in its thick mixture of soy sauce, sugar and stock.

Uni arrived next, the fresh sea urchin roe served in a small wrapper of seaweed. The balance of texture is remarkable; smooth and rich roe countered by the crisp and dry seaweed, as is the play of colors: bold, shiny black and delicate, pale pink.

After this healthy dose of protein, the chef changed the pace with a recently popular vegetarian preparation, katwari dalkon; the fresh young sprouts of the giant white radish set on a bed of proper sushi rice that had been sea-soned with vinegar, a touch of sugar and just a hint of sait. The little green-tipped sprouts are tight and delicately flavored, slightly astringent and references to the super super and refreshingly crisp.

We turned next to traditional sushi, feasting on ultrafresh portions of fatty tuna and clear white bonito, then wound up the meal with an intricate fantasy concoction of seaweed, fresh omelet and vinegared rice.

We left not only sated, but understanding well the meaning of the Japanese proverb that suggests "A stomach four-fifths full knows no

Sushi for the Beginner

HE Japanese generally eat sushi — small mounds of vinegared rice covered with various toppings — with their fingers, while sashimi — simply no more than sliced raw fish — is eaten with chopsticks. When eating sushi, dip the top — the fish end — not the rice, in the soy sauce. The topping side should reach the palate first, so the primary flavor is of the fish or shellfish. If you dip the rice in the soy sauce, the rice will fall apart, and the sushi absorbs too much soy sauce, thus obliterating the delicately balanced flavors. A dab of horseradish generally accompanies each sushi order and is there for mixing to taste with the soy sauce. Some purists omit the soy sauce and the borseradish altogether.

The vinegar-pickled ginger root, or gari, is designed to clear and reresb the palate between servings, not to be eaten with the sushi itself.

Some diners also prefer to forgo this ritual.

The Japanese drink tea, beer, sake, whisky and even hrandy with sushi. Connoisseurs still consider sake the best accompaniment, but for drinking before — never while or after — eating rice. Green tea may be drunk throughout the meal, and many consider it essential to the full enjoyment of the sushi meal. Sipping tea removes the aftertastes and leaves the mouth fresh for the next serving.

There is no rigid, set order in which to eat the various portions of sushi, but there are customs and common sense to be followed. In Japan, most people begin with magure, or tuna, the most popular sushi topping. Some prefer to begin with the groku, or sweet pressed ometer, since the ometer is a good test of the sushi chef's expertise. Others prefer to end with the ometer, regarding it as the sushi dessert.

When eating a combination sushi plate, the maki-zushi, or servings wrapped in nori, or seaweed should be eaten first, since seaweed loses its crispness once it comes into contact with damp rice.

How many pieces of sushi make a full meat? It depends on one nationality and appeate. The Japanese generally eat no more than 10 pieces, though Westerners often manage to eat two to three times that.

Shopping: Bargains in Ireland

by Ellen Wallace

ALWAY, Ireland — The drive in ci-ther direction from Galway City is magnificent: the Burren mountains Aran islands and inlets of Galway Bay are a wild mixture of violets, deep blues and pale greens, the colors ever-changing. On the other side, limestone-washed cottages in pastels with brilliant doors and shutters line the road to Connemara, one of the few areas where frish is still spoken.

Ireland's west coast is not only a camera bug's heaven but also the best place to buy some of the world's finest wool tweeds and woolen goods, as well as the durable and justiflably famous Aran hand-knit sweaters. Quali-ty goods can be bought at bargain prices throughout Ireland, wbether you are looking for a pullover or a Waterford crystal chande-lier, remember that the Value Added Tax of 20 to 25 percent is not charged on goods shipped out of the country. You must pay it if you carry your purchases, bowever. There is no VAT on clothing.

A number of New York designers are using a lot of Irish wool, especially Donegal tweeds. Most of these are manufactured in the northwest corner of the country and some of the best fabric selections can be found there.

Magee in Donegal carries an excellent col-lection of tweeds, including hand-woven fabrics. Prices, starting at £7 ($10.50) a meter, are very good for the quality. Providence Woolen Mills also has a factory outlet store (Foxford, County Mayo, telephone: Foxford 4) that carries a more-complete selection of their fabrics than can be found anywhere else in the country, as well as the entire line of Foxford blan-kets and travel rugs. The store sells at the company's suggested retail prices, bowever slightly higher than in other stores. A tartan plaid blanket selling here for £27.50 was priced at £24 at the Kilkenny Design Workshops (Nassau Street, Dublin, tel: 777-066). Kilkenny also carries a good selection of fine-weight wools, which average £11 a meter, 60 inches

There are two things to keep in mind when buying Irish woolens: first, the fabric is excellent, but styling is not an Irish strength and it might be best to take a hint from the designers

- buy just the fabric, unless you are in the market for a loose-fitting country jacket. (An exception is Colette Modes, 66 South Great George Street. Dublin, where classic smits range from £60 to £100.)

Second, decide if you want handwoven or machined material. The first is slightly more expensive as a rule and more beautiful, but it has imperfections that you may not want if you are having a suit made from it. Woolens. especially handwoven, often come in irregular widths so be sure to allow enough length to accommodate patterns.

Names to look for in handwoven goods: Avoca (blankets, selling for about £30), Studio Donegal (throws, about £20), Crock of Gold (smaller items, such as scarves in unusual color blends, about £4.50, and nice ues). Price variations are usually the result of stores' carrying old stock. The Weavers Shed (9 Duke Lane. Dublin, tel: 773-716) is small and dark, so be sure to take purchases to the window to avoid color surprises later. Prices for handwoven fabrics are good (starting at £6.50 a meter) and there is a nice selection of smaller items.

Five stores that carry mixtures of andwoven and machined fabries at reasonable prices are: Magee of Donegal, Kilkenny Workshops (shops in Dublin and Kilkenny), Blarney Woolen Mills in Blarney, County Cork (shop carefully here, as top-quality goods are mixed in with mediocre). Millers of Clifden (County Galway) and O Maille (Dominic Street, Galway). The last carries one of the most-traditional collections, including rough tweed designs that Aran Islanders have been getting cut into jackets for 30 years.

Price variations are more nouceable when shopping for Aran knitwear. The sweaters are a creamy off-white color, handknit in partly scoured wool known as bainin. The stitches used originated on the Aran Islands and each tells a story. Knitting the sweaters is a west coast cottage industry; when in the area two good stores are Gaeltarra (Tourmakeady. County Mayo, tel: Tourmakeady 7 and 15) and Mairtin Standum (Spiddal, County Galway, tel: 83102/8).

A medium-size woman's pullover with four traditional patterns runs about £30; at Brown Thomas and Switzers Department Stores in Dublin they average £40. At Shannon Airport's duty-free shop, the sweaters are about £38. The more patterns, the higher the price.

When shopping in smaller stores, be sure to ascertain that it is bainin yarn; a slightly sweet smell is retained by the oil in the wool, which provides water resistance.

The city of Waterford is often on the tourist's itinerary, with plans to find a bargain in crystal. By all means, go — if you want a tour of the factory. Waterford Crystal (which is one of the most elaborately cut in the world) is a good buy in Ireland, averaging about half the price found elsewhere, but it is sold everywhere in the country at factory-set prices.

Switzers (92 Grafton Street, Dublin) and Waterford Crystal are jointly owned so Switzers carries one of the biggest stocks in the country. If you are buying £100 worth of goods ask for the £10 gift voucher. Switzers also guarantees replacement of any crystal broken in shipping, as does Brown Thomas, across the street in Dublin. Typical prices: sherry glasses from £8.25 to £26.85; chandeliers from £400 to £2,000; door handles from Another good buy, this one for the smoker, is a Peterson pipe. These are manufactured south of Dublin and sold by Kapp & Peterson (stores on Grafton and O'Connell Streets, Dublin). Small women's pipes sell for £4.50, while the average meerschaum and briar pipe are £10 to £25. Connoisseur's models are £70 to £200 - roughly half what they cost outside Ireland.

Some of the most enjoyable and worthwhile shopping in Ireland involves discovering the excellent craftsmen scattered around the country. The Kilkenny Design Workshops are a good starting point; they are a government-backed organization that encourages good lrish design in crafts and industry. I wo of the artisans whose work is sold there are Keith Leadbetter (Kilkenny), glassblower, and Ni-cholas Mosse (Benneltsbridge, County Kilkenny I, potter. They and most other craftsmen sell seconds in their own shops, at greatly reduced prices. Kilkenny Workshops, for example, sells Mosse stamped-design pottery storage jar for £20.50 while Mosse has seconds for £9.60.

The easiest way to spend your money, of course, is to buy everything during one trip to the Dublin department stores or save it all for the Shannon duty-free shop. Not only will you pay more, you will miss a few worthwhile detours down Ireland's seemic country roads.

ENICE - City of waterborne dreams and kitsch capital of the western world (consider the trinkets and figurines of the tourist trade), Venice has ded in remaining a periodic meeting blace of the arts and now, once again, is stagng its Biennale

The Biennale has wobbled quite a lot over the last decade. In 1976, for instance, it was militant in spirit and seemed to shift towards the red end of the spectrum. This year's show, running until Sept. 12, will certainly seem less purbulent than some and will probably please a broader public, in part because the main show, at the central pavilion, is chiefly devoted to remesentational art - Arikha, Guccione, Guiman; Raymond Mason, Music, Szafran and Varlin among others — or works of representa-, Raymond Mason, Music, Szafran and tional fantasy - Jean Amado, Olivier, Irving Petlin and Tongiani.

An homage to Matisse, Egon Schiele and Brancusi has been announced, but just before the opening last Sunday the Matisses were still presumed to be in the Soviet Union, although en route, and neither Schiele nor Brancusi had a single work on view. A large show devoted to the Catalan artist Antoni Tapies is to be seen at the Scuola Grande di San Giovanni l'Evangelista. One Italian newspaper attacked it as a great publicity coup by the Maeght gallery, but one of the gallery's directors denied this with some heat, declaring that the initiative for the show came from the Biennale organizers them-

The State of

About 80 younger artists were invited to display their work in the Magazzini del Sale on the Zattere and the Cantiere Navali on the Giudecca. The show invites attention for a number of reasons, but the most insistent presence, if not the most interesting, is that of what might be described as Expressionism-withnothing-to-express. By this I mean a style that appears to be cropping up in various European countries as well as in the United States in the works of Dokoupil, Fetting, Nelli, Schnabel.

This is something that had a meaning of sorts in social terms when it was practiced clandestinety on the side of subway cars. In this shape it was also devoid of much content. but it very effectively vented a raw impulse to declare "I exist!" and most likely "The bell with you!" in strident tones. The subway is the perfect place for such a cry because it repre-sents the impersonal and mechanical aspect of the urban world and at the same time it is a splendid vehicle for publicity. At that stage it was an undefined "thing" one "did." But pretty soon it became "subway art" and that was the beginning of the end.

The end is that the apparatchiks of art brought this non-style into the museums and the home of collectors and turned the whole thing inside out. One could almost say that they bave created the "art subway," something like the House of Horrors where, for a modest fee, you are trundled through a tunnel in which spooks, skeletons, spiders and bats pop out in a flash of light among recorded screa and groans and the rattle of chains.

Color and brutal shapes slosbed overnight on the side of a subway train or on a wall of a vacant lot are a statement about the colorless, emotionless quality of that vacancy and the city around it. Color and hrutal shapes sloshed on canvas by a rising artist who is "strong" and "professional" become a statement about the elusive essence of art - and as such this violent, vacant type of expressionism falls short. But now the train is underway and we can look forward to a long ride through a lot of bumdrum stridency, devoid of any signifi-cant human content other than exacerbated ego and occasional enlightened ambition. Which is human, I suppose, hut not buman enough.

A second strain of sorts appears in the work of such Italian artists as Piruca, Mariani, Alberola and di Stasio, who painstakingly refer to 17th- and 18th-century art, sometimes carrying this straightfaced impersonation of the most insufferable aspects of mythological painting to the point where the result is pure

Much of what is shown in this selection has the craftsmanlike quality of high decorative art; there are, for example, Laura Panno's surprising high relief sculptures of nude bodies done in fine wire mesh, or Stephen Cox's broken stone tympanon. As much could be said of the sculptures of Tony Grand at the French

On the other hand, not that many works seem to achieve a life of their own among the artists shown on the Zattere and the Giudecca. There are exceptions: Indian artist Anish Kapoor's cement sculptures covered with pure powdered pigment, the works of Gerard Garouste, a very good draftsman, or those of Filippo Avalle, who is represented among other things by a very large drawing of a human figure made of a cloud of fine lines that reveal minute figures and events.

As usual, an important part of the main show occurs in the national pavilions - 36 participating nations were announced in the catalog. Variety is no doubt the spice of the Biennale. Australia is represented by two artists, including Peter Booth who paints large canvases full of a sort of apocalyptic expressionism. Among the Japanese artists is Yoshio Kitayama, who makes delicate, large, kite-like pieces by using twigs and colored paper. Britain is represented by only one artist, sculptor Barry Flanagan, whose 20-year career is main ly illustrated by cavorting hares and marble sculptures that sometimes look like pathologically shy beambags.

The Italian pavilion is the largest of them all and presents works by 25 artists. The Polish artists Ryszka and Kucz offer ceramic works full of a grim expressionism of the sort one might expect from a country in a critical situation. The Dutch chose the very minimal work of Stanley Brouwn - single, very long, straight lines with measurements ticked off on them. The West Germans filled one room with an endless calendar computation by Hanne Darboven and another with large works by Got-hard Graubner, shaped roughly like box mat-tresses and swahbed on the spot by the artist, with a single field of nuanced color. The East Germans seem predominantly neo-expression-ist hut I was amused by the impish work of Uwe Pfeiffer, and chiefly his two "Narrenau to" (Car of Fools) paintings.

Spain is showing, among other artists, Josep Guinovart, who made a circular environment for the central room of the pavilion — a hand some montage of paint, straw, earth, metal and some monlage of paint, straw, earth, inctal and cloth. The United States chose to present a retrospective of land artist Robert Smithson, who died in 1973 at the age of 35 in a plane crash. The Soviet Union, finally, in an unexpected departure, has chosen to show nothing but portraits and self-portraits in what is, for country, a fairly wide range of esthetic

In a sense Italy, more than any other Western country, is a place where extremes are in constant confrontation, sometimes rhetorical and sometimes violent. It is a country of prolound artistic and religious tradition, and at the same time a country where the politics of the left have deeply inflected people's language and thinking.

The Biennale has been a sounding board for ideas and emotions old and new. It does not present itself this year with the imposing theoretical apparatus it has occasionally offered in the past — or of the sort one usually en-counters at the Kassel Documenta, which opens next week. Instead it rather plays down the theoretical aspect this year and allows the works to speak for themselves --- when they

ARIS - Fifteen years ago, most professionals felt that the French decorative arts of the Charles X period (1824-30) were bound to catch up with those of the 18th century. A few suspected that Art Deco furniture and objets d'art would likewise go up. although not nearly so high. What happened was immensely different.

Art Deco zoomed skyhigh reaching parity with the 18th century in several categories. The Charles X style, on the other hand, went up dramatically at first and then stagnated. Prices for the best pieces now stand at about a fifth of those paid for 18th-century works of corresponding caliber.

A striking illustration of this state of affairs was provided by a sale conducted at Drouot by Jean Louis Picard a week ago. The pieces were offered by private owners identified as "Prince and Princess de T...". Under any circumstances, such a provenance induces dealers to hid more willingly. They did, but that was not enough to tip the scales. Prices remained remarkably modest compared with those currently paid for 18th-century works of art even though these are not at their highest. A pair of ormolu candelabra rising from green marble pedestals in the finest neo-classical manner were knocked down at 22,570 francs (about $3,360). Objects of comparable size and quality done in any of the styles cultivated in the 18th century would easily fall within the 150.000-250,000-frane bracket. When it came to furniture, the underpricing of the Charles X period was equally blatant. Right at the beginning, there was a collector's piece — a chair specially designed for a painter, including an easel that cranks up and down on the side of the chair. The purpleheart veneer inlaid with yellow-wood neo-gothic designs pointed to the late 1820s or 1830s. The cataloger noted that, according to family tradi-tion, the piece was believed to have been owned by Eugene Defactors. It was knocked down at 37,970 francs, twice the expert's medium estimate, but, nevertheless, peanuts for a museum piece.

The other museum piece in the sale was a sideboard opening with two doors while the hinging comice opened vertically to disclose the inside devised as a bureau. When closed, the piece looks like a superb element of neoclassical architecture. Purpleheart inlay is used for the linear motifs on the shimmering vellow ground of the ash-burr veneer. Although described as "Charles X." this was obviously made under Louis XVIII [1815-24]; the strictly neo-classical design — palmettes, ribbons, lau-ret crowns — includes none of the scrolling motifs so typical of the Charles X style.

The quality is truly royal and, indeed, the piece may well have been commissioned by a member of the royal house. It is stamped with the mark of Otto Kolping, who executed several pieces of furniture for the Imperial Garde Meubles as early as 1811. In 1837, he was still getting commissions from the French court. At 121.570 francs, the highly important piece sold for a lifth to a tenth of what a piece of compa-rable splendor carrying the mark of a leading 18th-century cabinet-maker might be expected to fetch. It should be emphasized that such a piece is rarer than the finest Louis XVI furniture because the period was shorter and production, within that short span of time, was proponionately more limited owing to the impoverishment of the French aristocracy. That makes the price ridiculously low. Yet, this was no surprise: the estimate put forward by the expert Jean-Pierre Dillee was even slightly

This is the latest piece of evidence that, to this day, the leading furniture collectors of the world won't even stop to consider the Charles X style. Nor will museums. In no other field of involving such a modest outlay, fail to stir intense competition between institutions, particularly after having been suitably advertised in a finely illustrated catalog.

The reasons for this neglect are multiple, In France, Charles X furniture fails to stir interest because the traditional-minded upper class' idea of splendor in the decorative arts for long equated with the 18th century and has lately extended to the 17th century but still leaves out the 19th century.

Museums are not interested either. I suspect that one factor that may have hurt the Louis XVIII and Charles X periods is that they were davishly imitated under the following monarch. Louis Philippe (1830-48). The pieces produced in simplified form at that time, mostly in mahogany, act as a distorting mirror. sending back a cheap-looking reflection of the Charles X sivic. Another factor that may have prevented it from being given the attention it eserves is the scarcity of serious studies on the subject. At auction, cataloging is frequently haphazard. There were some entertaining slips in the sale. A writing table datable to the Napoléon 111 period (1852-70), if not even later, as indicated by the fussy carved legs, was cataloged as a Charles X period piece — and sold for 22,570 francs.

Right at the end there came a real howler. A fine rug described as having a "bordure à la cathedrale," or a neo-gothic framing border. and ascribed to the Charles X period, actually reproduces a standard pattern of Islamic architecture. The "neo-gothic" border imitates a calligraphic frieze in the Arabic script known as Kufic, of the foliated and knotted type. Such a design is unlikely to be earlier than the 1870s. Had the expert given it a moment's thought, he would probably not have made such a mistake. That is just the point: It would be hard to find a more telling indication of devastating indifference to a field as a whole.

Texas Library: The Bucks Stop Here

by Dan Balz

USTIN, Texas - From the acquisition of a Gutenberg Bible to the re-cruitment of a Nobel Prize-winning physicist, the University of Texas has used money to buy academic respectability.

The university is an institution with ambi-tions and the wealth to achieve them, Its endowment, from oil-producing lands, is almost $1.7 billion, placing it nearly on a par with Harvard. Its campus bere has 48,000 students, a $29-million basketball arena, a $6.6-million swimming complex and a growing list of su-perstar faculty members. In recent years, it has lured Steven Weinberg, who won the Nobel Prize for physics while at Harvard, and Mar-shall Rosenbluth, an eminent fusion specialist

The aggressiveness of university officials to spend money on new facilities and top schol-ars has established if not a climate of excel-lence, then at least a sense of possibility that exists at few other institutions in the United

In many respects, the Humanities Research Center exemplifies this feeling. It paid $2.4 million in 1978 to acquire a Gutenberg Bible and in that one stroke helped show it was serious about bringing the best to the university. Other acquisitions may be more useful to scholars but the Gutenberg Bible symbolizes to the world at large the commitment of Texas to be second to none. Or so university officials

In its pursuit of literary manuscripts, the Humanities Research Center has grown in 25 years to be one of the leading libraries in the world and boasts an almost unparalleled collection of modern British and American manuscripts. But now Texas has lost out to the University of California at Los Angeles in a bid to acquire the manuscripts and archives of composer Igor Stravinsky, one of the crown jewels of 20th-century culture. At an institution used to getting its way with money and manu-scripts, no one can understand why,

"This I would regard as a major defeat." said Decherd Turner, the director of the Humanities Research Center and a man not used to losing such battles, "We're terribly disappointed, chiefly because the background setung and resources bere were so much superi-

Texas offered $2 million for the collection to UCLA's $1.5 million, but in Surrogate Court in New York City, the Texans were told that, in the academic world, there is more than money, "Even if a purchaser were to offer $20 million for these archives and manuscripts

"There's a feeling of snobbism toward the University of Texas, you know, a feeling of, 'Maybe they have a lot of money, but they haven't been wearing shoes for a very long time."

with the intention that the purchaser would then destroy these papers, this court would not and could not approve of such a sale," wrote Judge Millard Midonick in his decision.

The scholars bere, who had pursued the Stravinsky collection for more than a decade. resent that sentence because of their pride in the university's boldings, and they regard the defeat as a sign that age-old prejudice toward Texans still exists.

'There's a feeling of snohhism toward the University of Texas, you know, a feeling of, Maybe they have a lot of money, but they haven't been wearing shoes for a very long time, "says Carlton Lake, a former foreign correspondent who is now the center's executive curator.

The Humanities Research Center was the brainchild of former chancellor Harry C. Ransom, who decided that the university should have a first-class research library and, with dazzling speed, created it, beginning in 1957. Its holdings are awesome: the handwritten originals, and later drafts, of William Faulkner's "Absalom! Absalom!"; D.H. Lawrence's "Lady Chatterley's Lover" and others; George Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman" and others; Samuel Beckett's "Waiting for Go-dot": Eugene O'Neill's "Mourning Becomes Electra"; the first photograph ever taken (in 1826); the complete library and papers of Eve-lyn Waugh, including walking sticks; the pa-pers of Tennessee Williams, Edgar Lee Masters and others; and even the study of Erle Stanley Gardner.

Ransom bought things that no one else was buying and bought in quantities that astounded the rest of the academic world. In the 1960s, Texas bid on nearly everything relating to modern literature and got almost all that it

Ransom's methods offended much of the library world, because other librarians were by the University of Texas' voracious appetite. For a time so much material was being acquired that the university could not process it. But today, the collection has carned the respect of other institutions.

"It's a young collection and they've done a very good job," said Rodney G. Dennis, cura-tor of manuscripts at Harvard. "I don't think they were silly or vulgar."

New York Art Loses Its Cool

by Edith Schloss

Untitled painting by Basquiat, former subway artist.

TEW YORK - They sought it with thimbles, They sought it with care; They pursued it with forks and bope: They threatened its life with a railway share ... "Like Lewis Carroll's "Hunting of the Snark," today in the United States the hunt for the latest salable "in" style is on. And after art close to technology — the concoptual, the minimal and other dry, self-concious exercises - a new wind has been blowing in the land for some time: Cool is out and

Already somewhat exploited by the market, there is a genuine turn to the instinctual, the irrational in art. In New York, still the flamboyant art capital of the world, this turn to the loose and emotional is more than accepted. In Solio, Basquiat, who as "Samo" used to leave his mark on subway trains, now in the Nosei Gallery is attacking canvas with paint stick, still pretending not to be scared of anything, in gleeful, slightly smart-alecky riffs on cooking, eating and living in railroad flats and hack al-kys.

The famous loft building at 420 West Broadway, with its chic galleries until yesterday as impersonal and tidy as operating rooms, bas been invaded with new forms of expression-ism. On an upper floor the skillful German es naked human ligures upside down (Sonnabend), while downstairs a stable of restive runners under and around age 30 are pawing the ground (Boone). Their canvases are outsize, their brushwork or poured paint de-scribe apparitions fixed often with a studied

Uptown, Joan Snyder is less cold-nosed, dredging up nightmare maws of monsters, ready to devour children and flowers (Hamilton). An unbridled rough attack is also used for abstractions, some also shown in the Hamilton Gallery: Elizabeth Murray, Katherine Poner, Gary Stephan, Hennesy, with dynamic rounds, straights or wedges, cut across the canvas in bright, thick pigment. Among the mature and older painters reigns naturally a more contemplative spirit: the abstractions of Jack Tworkov at the Guggenheim and those of Perle Fine (Ingber) are finely calibrated structures or webs in sober gradations of color. And among the figurative painters celebrating the grandeur of New York, Lucien Day is foremost (Blue Mountain). His downlown skyscrapers — totems of power hovering over dark wet bollows of streets — are as translucent and glittering as Monet cathedrals. Yvonne Jacquette (Brooke Alexander), looking down from top stories and from planes in her mural-size oils, renders the city at night as if it were a tapestry embroidered with silk threads

But it was the exhibitions of two gestural

masters that polarized the art world One was of De Kooning who, now aged 79, has reached a mastery that is unbeatable. "Damn him, such power, such looseness." a fellow painter exclaimed at the Xavier Fourcade gallery. The show, starting with last year's smaller canvases in cabbage greens and pur-ples, led to this year's illuminated abstractions wide and swelling, billowing cascades of paint, not a petty thought or shape in them. Strokes wide as broom sweeps, trowel paths, tongue flicks of line; yellows, flesh pinks, sky and bottle blues, white on white stream onto heroic erasures. There are no loose ends any more. Earlier

De Kooning paintings were about possibilities - ambiguities and tensions, the torment of paintings as the torment of life — and anything finished was considered wicked. But De Kooning has gone on to push his extraordinary ability to its limits. It has carried him to Olympus, from where be still burls thunderboits of luminous color, but where he sits en-

While De Kooning is grand, well-rehearsed virtuoso performance. Cy Twombly is the sheer, fresh essence of improvisation. Those who stayed to gaze at De Kooning in almost worshipful silence uptown could not tune in to Twombly, some decades younger, inward and not epic, still beir to abstract expressionism. Downtown, his new paintings (Sperone), made of a series of units on paper, were a series of insights made fragrantly visible.

A long-contemplated thought suddenly explodes into cottonball whooshes, chrysan-themums, little horned things of paint. Twomhly's attack is strung very fine and, frail and taut, takes high risks. When his arrow hits it is piercing, a flare of pure lyricism: Something bright has gone by - it is bared emotion about the lonely grace of beings, alive for an instant in sunlight

To return to the prosaic: It is a curious fact that all the shows of quality are on the upper floors of buildings. On a Saturday afternoon in SoHo, the folks from suburbia flood the brasher ground-floor galleries but leave the up-per floors unmolested, much like the World War tl Russian soldiers in Berlin who, country boys afraid of the unforeseen on upper levels, raped and plundered only downstairs.

Dense throngs trot in and out of the streetlevel galleries to stare at incomprehensible. amusing objects, wondering what makes them interesting and valuable, and enjoy recogniz-ing not only the artists but their glamorous dealers, who now get star billing. Current magazine articles, putting the ingenuity that went into the making of works of art on the same plane as the ingenuity of its promoters, dwell less on the development of artists than on the shrewdness and sudden rise to fame of their manipulators and godfathers. These, making sure that the goods are properly "product-tested in an auction room' first, now cater to a breed of nouveau riche collectors who blitbely accumulate and discard art as if it were designer fashion.

So it is not surprising to see ambitious young artists at parties ever ready to show slides of their wares, to spout their own achievements and to keep their work neatly displayed on their studio walls as if m a gal-lery, ready for any buyer. And indeed collectors are now often led directly to the artists by certain critics - so the gallery, which provides an important cultural service, is bypassed. "Today the gallery is a luxury," says a corporate buyer, who sells works that "are not intimate, riot personal, not too strong" directly

But this bage center - in which art is some times wall-filler, mass entertainment, consum er simmick, investment - because of its very diversity and liveliness, also generates its own "resistance." Just as in Lewis Carroll, "the Snark is a Boojum" and commercialism will make its bunters "softly and suddenly vanish away" in the end.

The drive to make successful art destroys the original creative drive. Art is made for spir-itual gain first, before it is made for anything else. Poetry and music have an easier time of it in one sense, not producing obviously tangible "commodities" — although paper, linen, marble and wood are worth little beyond their material value without the inventive mind and hand behind them. So despite the bype and establishment art, there is an "underground" of those who believe in just doing their thing and quietly go on with it.

Finally there were two madly messy big shows in which bardly anything was salable.

The first was at P.S. 1—the public school in Queens converted into "The Institute for Art and Urban Renewal"—a showplace for selected parisms from the United States. lected artists from the United States and abroad; the second was a truly underground event in an abandoned warehouse under the Brooklyn side of the Williamsburgh Bridge, which was open to anyone. In both, the surplus goods that suffocate our society were recycled with glee.

At P.S. 1, shrines and caves, as if assembled from dumpster loads, were put together from discarded shopwindow displays, discotheque trimmings, debris that seemed to have survived a plane crasb - and provided with winking lights, moving parts and loud tapes. There were murals of babies, bats and cadavers. Elahorate machinery and contraptions clutched fake, or perhaps real, skeletons in their metal claws. Images on closed-circuit television raced by. But there were also islands of burnor and reflection, as for instance in an amusing "Art Cars," assembled by Emery Clark, and a room given to Solia Nicoletti, with tiny fantasies about dragons, toilet seats and angels, which could easily have litted in the Guggenheim's "Italian Art Now."

In Williamsburgh it was even more difficult to tell where the real garbage left off and the art began. There were pictures of faces before and after an atomic explosion, crude erections - sculpture and otherwise - but also paintings of still lifes and virgins.

Much was made of doomsday dread in both shows as if children or primitives were fashioning fetishes to exorcise their fears. There were nastily erotic tableaux and a lot of heartlessness for spite. Much was undigested. But depite their confusion and violence, they were deeply symptomatic of an overdeveloped country still full of resources and abundance, where anything goes — where there is a sur-plus of energy, energy seeking direction. One would like to think that all those rag pickers were acting in defiance, against the perversion, the overmechanization of their society. Under all the anarchy, desperation and ugliness there was also purity: "We do the best Sculpture Gallery we can. And not for money."

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Mobil Abandons Exploratory Well

NEW YORK — Mobil Oil plans to abandon its first exploratory well drilled on the Georges Bank off Massachussetts after finding no sign of hydrocarbons, it said Friday. Mobil, as operator for itself and five other companies, drilled the well to 20,000 feet at an estimated cost of $35 minon.

The well, designated Naragansett 312-1, is situated in 250 feet (76 meters) of water, 160 miles (255 kilometers) east of Nantucket. Mobil said its semisubmersible drilling rig will move immediately 15 miles east and begin drilling the West Long Island 273-1 well.

Dome 'Encouraged' by Debt Talks

TORONTO — Dome Petroleum is "encouraged" by its discussions with the federal government and its bankers regarding the company's financial position, Chairman John P. Gallagher said Friday. He said Dome expects an answer on its debt-restructuring within a few weeks. He said Dome has been committing a large percentage of its cash flow to service its debt and principal repayments, and is meeting all these obligations. Dome, with debt of $6.39 billion, is estimated to face payments of about $1.4 billion this year and has been trying to sell assets, according to industry analysts. "In the circumstances, we have a minimal capital program and all major new projects have been deferred, and development expenditures and administrative overhead have been drastically reduced," Mr. Gallagher said at the annual meeting.

Intel, Motorola Set an Exchange

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Intel and Motorola have agreed to exchange technical information and establish a standard design for magnetic bubble memory technology for computers, they said Friday. The companies will jointly develop two devices based on Intel's bubble memory, then manufacture and market the units independently.

Under the agreement, Intel will transfer design data to allow Motorola to produce the peripheral chips necessary to operate th new bubble memories, and Motorola will supply Intel with process technology to

Japan Renews Plea Against U.S. Ban

TOKYO - Japan has again asked the United States to remove a ban on the supply of sophisticated U.S. equipment needed for a joint Japanese-Soviet oil and gas development project off the Soviet island of Sakhalin, which is north of Japan's conthernmost island of Hokkaido. Sakham, which is north of Japan's corthernmost island of Hokkaido.

Shintaro Abe, the international trade and industry minister, said Friday he made the request in a meeting with Mike Mansfield, the U.S. ambassador to Japan. He warned that U.S. failure to grant approval could be detrimental to relations between Tokyo and Washington. The Japanese have invested about $220 million in the project.

Itel Announces Reorganization Filing

SAN FRANCISCO — Itel, the transportation and industrial equipment leasing company, has filed a reorganization plan with the U.S. Bankruptcy Court here, it announced Friday. James H. Maloon, Itel's chairman, chief executive officer and president, said he expects to give up these positions to serve Itel as an adviser. The reorganization plan is based on an agreement in principle with lter's unsecured creditors' and secured lenders' committee, Itel said. The terms, announced last month, dealt with how to treat most of the company's $330 million in secured debt.

Itel said it intends to file a disclosure statement by Sept. 15 and has asked the court to set a hearing in October. Itel has been operating its business under Chapter 11 of U.S. bankruptcy law since January 1981, when it owed about $1.6 billion.

Ford to Buy Engines From Mitsubishi

TOKYO — Mitsubishi Motors has agreed to sell diesel engines Ford Motor beginning in two or three years, Mitsubishi said Friday.

The agreement, signed Thursday in New York, calls for Ford to purchase up to 75,000 of the four-cylinder, turbocharged engines each year for three years, it said. The price was not announced. Mitsubishi said the transaction would not affect Mitsubishi's relationship with Chrysler, which owns 15 percent of the Japanese carmaker's stock.

Cuba Remains Dependent on Sales to West

By Alan Riding New York Times Service

HAVANA - Two decades after the Castro government openly embraced Socialism, the slump in world sugar prices has brought an uncomfortable reminder of Cuba's continuing economic dependence on the West.

Although two-thirds of its sugar is sold to the Soviet bloc, Cuba needs sales on the open market to maintain its lifeline to hard currencies. With sugar accounting for 80 per-cent of its total exports and with a sharp decline in the world price, the shortage of foreign exchange is pushing the Cuban economy into a slump.

"Cuba remains as dependent on sugar as it was in 1960," said a Latin American economist who asked not to be identified. "Its fortunes rise and fall with the Western price of sugar. And now they have fallen."

After a record 12-percent growth last year, a figure inflated by a particularly bad performance in 1980, the Cuban economy is officially expected to expand by only 2.5 per-cent this year. And officials acknowledge privately that with the world sugar price running at 9 cents a pound, the growth rate: 2ay be as low as 1 percent.

ing of Cuba's estimated $3.7 billion debt to the West would receive top priority.

But, with payments on interest and princi-pal of $800 million due over the next 12 months, Cuba has had no choice but to reduce public spending and imports. Many factories requiring imported raw material are already working far below capacity.

Investment and production targets established just 18 mooths ago for the current five-year plan are also being revised downward. For example, instead of building two 350-megawatt plant will be constructed. At the same time, in its scramble for new sources of foreign exchange, the government is looking for markets in the West for its citrus fruit, cement and nickel. Exports of Cuban cigars, seriously burt by a tobacco disease in 1980, are again on the rise.

Tourism is also being encouraged. Following last month's decision by the United States to tighten its economic boycott of Cuba by banning business and pleasure travel to the island, Cuba has acted to stimulate tourism from other countries by replacing the tedious visa requirement with tourist cands issued by travel agencies and sirilines. cards issued by travel agencies and airlines. Central Bankers Intervene to Slow Advance of Dollar

NEW YORK - Modest but apparently concerted intervention by central banks helped slow the dollar's ascent Friday, foreign-exchange dealers said.

They said the Bundesbank of West Germany, the Bank of Japan and the Swiss National Bank intervened to prop up their currencies.

The central banks now appear to be taking a more active role in foreign exchange markets as the dollar takes another step forward," a dealer for Barclay's Bank International in London said. In New York, the dollar opened weaker but quickly resumed its climb. The U.S. currency was quoted at about 2.4602 Deutsche marks at midday, compared with an opening at 2.4522 and Thurs-day's close of 2.4550. The dollar rose to 2.1220 Swiss

Dow Average Drops To a 26-Month Low

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange declined Friday for the fifth session in a row, driving the Dow Jones industrial average to its lowest level in 26 months.

The Dow average, which fell 5.42 points Thursday to a two-year low, was moderately lower all day and closed with a decline of 2.86 points to 788.62, its lowest finish since April 21, 1980, when the average closed at 759.13.

Declines led advances Friday by around two to one; volume rose to 53.8 million shares from 49.2 million Thursday.

Gulf, Cities Service Confident of Clearing Antitrust Hurdle

TULSA, Okla. - Cities Service and Gulf Oil are confident they can overcome any antitrust probkens posed by their proposed merger, which would create the fifth-largest U.S. oil company, a top Cities official said Friday. There could be questions the Justice Department or the Federal Trade Commission could raise, but we don't see any unsolvable problems," Cities' president, Robert Chitwood, told reporters.

Stock analysts, however, noted that the planned $5-billion acquisition, announced Thursday, is like-partment said almost immediately that the venture would be reviewed by the Federal Trade Commission for possible antitrust problems.

Rosario S. Ilacqua, an energy analyst at Rothschild Unterberg Towbin, said the two parties probably would have to agree to certain divestitures. Required sales of as-sets, he said, would probably involve refining and marketing.

Analysts said that both companies have refineries in Louisiana and that their marketing opera-

Cities' Mr. Chitwood said Gulf probably would file its proposed $63-a-share tender offer for 51 percent of Cities Service stock on Monday. Gulf plans to exchange securities worth at least $63 apiece for the remaining Cities shares. The boards of both companies have approved the merger, but it is still subject to shareholder votes.

The merger would be the third-largest in U.S. history, exceeded in value only by the $7.2-billion pur-chase of Conoco by Du Pont and U.S. Steel's $6-billion sequisition of the Marsthon Oil Both mergers of the Marathon Oil. Both mergers were completed last year.

BRUSSELS — France is considering asking its European Economic Community partners for loans of about $2 billion under arrangements for assisting community countries beset by balance of payments squeezes, EEC Commission sources said Friday.

The commission has not yet received a formal request, the sources said, but the possibility has been discussed within the French 20vernment If such a loan were approved, funds would be raised by the EEC on international markets and then relent to France, the sources said. EEC governments agreed last year to raise the ceiling on the availability of such financing to six billion Entopean currency units ($6.2 billion), and France would be the first borrower to take advantage of the loan program since then.

Italy and Ireland both borrowed hands from the EEC under similar arrangements during the 1970s. Such loans are granted on the basis of strict economic policy condi-tions, meaning that negotiations between France and the EEC Commission would be necessary

Investigation Clears Baxter In IBM Case

New York Times Service NEW YORK - A Justice Department internal investigation has concluded there was on conflict of interest involved when William F. Baxter, the assistant U.S. attorney, general in charge of the antitrust division, dismissed the govern-ment's suit against International Business Machines, a department official said.

J. Paul McGrath, an assistant attomey general, disclosed the find-ings of the investigation to an appeals court in New York. He told the three-judge panel Thurs-day that the Justice Department considers the dismissal final.

But he said the report raises questions about Mr. Baxter's failure to disclose to Congress his pri-or dealings with IBM, which did oot come to light until after Jan. 8, case as being without merit.

The Justice Department investi-gation of Mr. Baxter began in March after it came to light that as a Stanford University law profes-sor in the 1970s, he had been paid $1,500 by a law firm defending IBM to help evaluate expert wit-

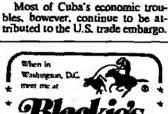

Subsequently, it was discovered that in 1976, Mr. Baxter had written a letter to the incoming Carter administration transition team saying the case should never have been brought; a grant from IBM financed part of a year's research by Mr. Baxter in the late 1960s, and last fall, while in the process of deciding to drop the IBM case, Mr. Baxter was arguing on IBM's behalf before officials of the European Economic Community, which also has an antitrust suit pending against the company.

Even more surprising, the Cas-tro government last February decreed its first foreign investment law, aimed at attracting the capital, technology and expertise oced-ed to make the Cuban economy more efficient. Agriculture, mining and fishing are excluded from the law, but industry, notably for textiles and consumer goods, has been opened up.

Access to Third World

The hope is that companies in Western Europe, Jepan and Canada might form joint ventures — owning up to 49 percent of stock — with the Cuban government in exchange for low-cost, "discip-lined" labor, low taxes and free repatriation of profits.

"A European company might also gain access to Third World markets through Cuba." said Jose M. Diaz Mirabel, president of the state-run Cuban Chamber of Com-

Yet these measures cannot disguise the fact that, 23 years after its revolution, the Cuban economy survives because of Soviet aid, estimated at $3 billion e year.

Much of it comes in subsidies Moscow pays four times the world price for Cuban sugar and pro-vides the island with ebeap oil but Cube has also accomplated a ruble debt equivalent to $9 billion. In addition. Cuba receives Soviet military equipment free, according to officials in Havana.

U.S. Emberge

Cuba says, oevertheless, that it is less dependent on the Soviet Un-ion today than it was on the United States before its revolution. "In 1959, 99 percent of our trade was with capitalist countries and only I percent with Socialist countries, Mr. Mirabel said. Today, 69 per cent is with Socialist countries and 31 percent with capitalist econo-

bles, bowever, continue to be at-tributed to the U.S. trade embargo.

THE DIARY OF VIRGINIA WOOLF, Volume IV, 1931-1935. Edited by Anne Olivier Bell, assisted by Andrew McNeillie. 402 pp.

Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 757 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017

Reviewed by Mary Cantwell

Woolf wrote "The Years" and "Flush," and contemplated "Three "Flush," and contemplated "Three Guineas" and "Roger Fry: A Biography" — no one of them quite up to her mark — and lost her friends Lytton Strachey, Francis Birrell and Fry. Bot except for the days when she felt horses galloping through her head or fell abed of migraine, she was possessed by life. That she was close to skinless was cause for joy: Mrs. Woolf welcomed and gloried in her own intensity. A headache, six days in bed, were small price to pay. "I like writing, I like change," she said. "I like to toss my mind up and see where it will toss my mind up and see where it will

One tries to imagine an American writer keeping a comparable diary to-day. Could New York, say, produce so vivid and verbal a cast, intercon-nected hy blood and marriage and class? Could a day in 1982 provide, for any but the rich, the leisure in which to write, tead, take an Italian lesson, fight with the cook and have four for tea and five for dinner and a four for tea and tree for dinner and a Bach recording before bedtime? Is anyone watching the world with Virginia Woolf's hawk vision? As Strachey lies dying at Ham Spray, his family fills the lounge at a nearby inn:
"The Stracheys, all gray, all woolen, all red nosed, swollen eyed, logical, quiet, exact, doing crossword puzzles; thinking of Lyton." She photo-graphed a death watch; 50 years later, the print is still clear. There are moments in the previous diaries where the violence of Mrs. Woolf's reaction to someone or something - the house of a philoprogenitive male, for instance, "smelled of sperm" — awakens the reader to her emotional fragility. But although she is as vituperative as ever ("baboon" — Cyril — "Connolly & his gollywog slug wife"), this fourth volume reveals a comparatively serene Woolf — as serene, that is, as so quicksilver a per-son was ever to be. She is also, she says many times throughout these five years, a happy person. She calls her mind an "engine," is delighted when it's running well and depressed when it comes to a halt, but confident now that it will turn over and start again. Too, she is tougher than one had thought: "Lord, what a shivering coward I am - but not as a writer, tho. I stick to that by way of compensa-tion." And when she and Leonard make plans to tour Germany in 1935. she says she will "cover Leonard's nose." Her nephew Quentin Bell said of the trip in his biography of Woolf, "It was the only time, so far as I know, when Leonard took an unjusti-

Bell's qualms. Virginia and Leooard traveled every spring, to Greece, France, Rome, Ireland and Germany. Ireland excited her. Never had she met a people with such a talent for talk - except, of course, wheo she was speaking to her mirror. They moved between their city and their country houses constantly; wherever they were, they had fiable risk with Virginia's nerves."

Reading her account, one questions widely but Redday said that was only to be expected since that section is composed of legal documents rather than dramatic narrative. "If you compared love letters and a

George Bernard Shaw and Rebecca West, all three of them sketched as if hy a caricaturist. In fact, no one and there are many characters in these diaries - is left without a few quick, and sometimes cruel, hrush strokes. The weather, too, and landscape. If Virginia Woolf, the diarist, had been a ainter, she would have been David

Her ending in suicide was probably inevitable, a mind incinerated hy its own genius. Still, one sees a joyous life, and a joyous woman. "If one does not lie back & say to the moment, this is my moment, stay you are so fair, what will be one's gain, dying?" she writes on New Year's Eve of 1932. "No: stay, this moment. No one ever says that enough. Always hurry. I am now going in to see L. and say stay this moment."

Genesis the Work Of Single Author, Scientists Conclude

United Press International HAIFA, Israel — The biblical book of Genesis was the work of a single author, a team of Israeli scientists has concluded after a computer study. In recent centuries a number of scholars concluded that Genesis, the first book of the Bible, was the work of about three authors.

This conclusion was based on certain contradictions and repetitions.
One "inconsistency" cited was the use of two different words for the Supreme Deity - Jahwist and Elohist.

From these names, these scholars called two of the authors "J" and "E" and also attributed remaining sections of the book to a priestly writer they designated "P." The theory of multiple authorship is widely taught and called the "documentary hypothesis."

However, a team of researchers at the Technion, Israel's Institute of Technology, fed the over 20,000 words of Genesis into a computer for analysis and concluded the book was written by one man.

The team, under Prof. Yehuda Radday, said it found the "I" and "E" narratives indistinguishable linguisti-cally. It found the "P" section differed

In Vigo, the Peruvians, who fell behind when Bruno Conti scored in the 22d minute, exerted unrelenting pressure after the interval and six minutes from the end Toribio Diaz fired in the equalizer.

Causio took up station in mid-field and the Italians showed little restraint in checking Peru's insistent attacks. But just when it seemed they had weathered the storm, Peru tied the match.

Teofilo Cubillas skimmed his free kick square in front of goal instead of teeing up a shot for Juan Carlos Ohlitas and Diaz raced for-ward to drive in his shot. Ther ball deflected off Conti and the Italian goalkeeper, Dino Zoff, could only watch the ball sail past him into the net.

The Italians had produced something approaching their best form in the first half when they took a 1-0 lead. Giancarlo Antognoni, enjoying another impressive game, released a square pass to Conti standing in front of goal and just outside the area. Conti's rising shot flashed into the top of the net, giving Ramon Quiroga no chance of making the save.

High Scoring Thompson Sent by Nuggets to Sonics

SAN DIEGO - David Thompson of the Denver Nuggets, once considered pro basketball's most spectacular player west of Julius Erving, was traded to the Seattle SuperSonics in exchange for Wally Walker, a forward, and the Sonics' first-round choice, the 19th pick over all, in the June 29 college draft.

The deal was announced Thursday at the National Baskethall

Association general managers' and coaches' meetings here.

"I felt we needed another quality backcourtman," said Lenny Wilkens, the Sonics' coach, "David is only 27 years old and has an abundance of talent. I think all be needs is a change of scenery."

Wilkens said he planned to start Thompson in the backcourt alongside Gus Williams, who averaged 23.4 points a game last season, seventh best in the NBA. "With the scoring potential of that backcourt," said Wilkens, "we're going to keep a lot of teams In seven seasons with the Nuggets, Thompson averaged 24.1 points per game, including one game of 71 points — a feat bettered only by Wilt Chamberlain.

"We are building a team that just isn't suited for David," said Carl Scheer, the president and general manager of the Nuggets, who is about to sell the team to B.J. (Red) McCombs, a San Antonio millionaire. "We think that it's healthy for both Denver and David Thompson for him to get a fresh start," he added. Thompson said he was glad to be leaving Denver, "The first few years in Denver were great," he said. "But when we started to lose, that's when the finger pointing and backstabbing becan, it's been not only never went to college, he never even saw an Ivy League foot-ball game. He is one of the most successful men I know.

"And Eddie Aaronson of Rockville, Md., made a decision that he could educate himself much better than any school could do it for him. The man can buy and sell anybody who went to the Wharton School of Business."

"But you went to college."
"If I knew then what I know now, I would have oever dooe it. I wasted four of the best years of my life studying for exams. I could have been driving a taxi then, instead of throwing my parents' money away on books and courses and dates. But just because I made a mistake is no reason you have to make the same one."

Plea Issued for Used Wigs The Associated Press

LONDON - A plea has gone out to British barristers for used wigs and gowns for fledgling lawyers who can't afford to boy new the traditional regalia of the British legal profession. A powdered wig oow costs about £150 ($245) new, and black robes about £50. The Senate of the Inns of Court and the Bar, the barristers' professional organization, says climbing prices have resulted in a growing demand for used wigs and gowns.

"I am. son. But just because they accepted you is no reason you have to go to any one of them. You've got a brilliant mind, and I hate to see them load it down with a lot of intellectual nonsense that could mess you up for the rest of your life. Besides, every college that has accepted you is part of the elitist establishment. By the time you graduate, you'll think that you are better than everybody else. Worse still, everybody else will think the same thing. Once you get a degree from a top-flight school, you'll be a marked man for the rest of your days."

complexes.

If there was any dominant force in the making of the design, it was Raymond Hood, the gifted shaper of skyscrapers who had been co-architect of the Daily News and Chicago Tribune buildings and had completed the blue-green International Style McGraw-Hill Building just as Rockefeller Center was coming into its own. Hood's talents meshed with the organizational skills of Wallace K. Harrison, who remained the center's prime architectural adviser until shortly before his death last year at $1.

What this collaboration yielded architecturally was a set of limestone buildings with dramatic profiles marked by crisp set-backs. The facades of all the original buildings were identical with cast-aluminum spandrel panels between the windows making for strong vertical lines. But the sizes and shapes were altogether different — the RCA Building, the 70-story centerpiece, is an immense slab, its form made sumptuous by its mounting setbacks; the International Building is smaller and bulkier; the other towers slightly smaller still, and arranged so that their shapes form a pinwheel around the central plaza.

The central plaza was not conceived originally as a skating rink; it was to be a below-ground entrance to the center's shopping concourse. But it soon became clear that holes in the ground do not work well as conventional plazas at all, and the rink was invented as a means of turning that space into a piece of theater. Luck was again on Rockefeller Center's side: The rink works so well that it is hard to believe that it was oot part of the original

But the plan of the center was never conceived in an instant as a single entity: it evolved constant-

Whether by luck or by skill, the final version of the design managed to edit out almost all of the mistakes, and it incorporated the best aspects of all the early plans. It also included several theaters, of which one, the 6,000seat Radio City Music Hall, is the city's triumphal palace of Art Deco design.

The popularity of the center as an office and commercial area was so enormous that the Rockefeller family expanded it beyond the original 14-building plan.

The newer buildings were not only poorer as works of urban design, they also lacked the architectural detail and lively integration of art and architecture that marked the original Rockefeller Center complex — which contains murals by José Maria Sert and sculpture by Paul Manship, Gaston Lachaise and Isamu Noguchi. There is art in the newer buildings, but little of it manages to engage in the graceful di-alogue with the architecture that occurs in the older structures.

But if the lessons of this complex were not understood by its own guardians, they could not be more appreciated now. A survey by the American Institute of Ar-chitects put Rockefeller Center among the buildings in the United States most admired by architects, and student drafting boards are full of imitations, both good and bad.

comment on the lawsuit, adding.

"But there is something even more interesting," he said. "A judgment was made last Tuesday in Nice for seizure of the book for invasion of privacy of the individuals in-volved. The seizure would apply to all copies in France, I believe.

Greene added, "No attempt was made to give me advance warning that the judgment was coming so that I could be there. Resides

Greene, the suit names The Bodley Head, publisher of the book, and The Sunday Times of London, which published large extracts. .

That will come out at the trial.

A New York City photographer? may not use commercially nucle photographs of teen-age actress Brooke Shields, taken when she was 10, an appeals court has ruled. The Appellate Division of the State Supreme Court found that Shields, 16, "could lawfully disaffirm" agreements signed by her mother that allowed photographer Gerry Gross to "use, reuse, and/or publish or republish" the photographs. The photographer's lawyer said the ruling means "nobody can make a contract with a minor in the entertainment business . . . because the minor can disaffirm He said he would appeal. Citing Miss Shields' court testimony that the photos now embarrass her, appellate Justice Sidney Asch wrote that the photographs violate a quintessential right of privacy."

Sir Ranniph Twisieton-Wyke-ham-Flennes, 38, and Charles Burton, 40, marooned since April on an Arctic ice floe, have tested special U.S. made canoes that they hope will take them home from their voyage around the world. The aluminum canoes were flown onto the floe, some 250 miles north of the Norwegian island of Spitzbergen. Frennes spent seven years or-ganizing the unprecedented journey, circling the world across both the North and South poles. The British explorers have crossed the Antarctic continent for the second time in history and reached the North Pole in April after a twomonth trek over the Arctic Ocean. Comparatively warm weather as they headed south again stranded them on the ice floe. They are now waiting for wide enough stretches of open water to make the canoes usable.
